*Congo: Although there have been some minor government successes, the military situation remains poor.

A government force has retaken the North Katangan rail center of Kabalo, due west of Albertville. News of the capture might induce already frightened rebels in the provincial capital to flee.

The US consul in Bukavu reports that government forces are "mopping up" after the successful defense of the city last week end. There are indications, however, of increased rebel activity at Goma, north of Bukavu. Near Goma are several thousand Tutsi refugees from Rwanda.

[redacted] the exiled Rwanda king is due in Burundi shortly--if he has not already arrived--and his arrival is supposed to be the signal for a refugee attack on Rwanda. The rebel failure to capture Bukavu--one of the likely invasion points--may stall the Tutsi invasion.

The Congolese Army in the northern provinces is still in disarray. The presence of rebels has been reported some 75 miles down river from Stanleyville, but still some 150 miles from Congo Army forces which are regrouping at Bumba under the tutelage of a Belgian Army officer. The report claiming that "Ilyushin" aircraft landed in Stanleyville is still unconfirmed.

*Lebanon: Charles Hilu, a moderate, [redacted] politician, will probably be elected president of Lebanon today.

Well over the required two-thirds majority of parliament is reported pledged to Hilu's election. This majority includes the "loyalists" who have been trying to persuade President Shihab to serve a second term. Shihab's backing indicates that army leaders will support Hilu. He evidently also has the necessary Muslim support and presumably is not objectionable to Nasir whose influence in Lebanon is strong.

Although Hilu is a Christian, as Lebanese political tradition requires for the presidency, he has not been the candidate favored by powerful Christian leaders such as ex-president Shamun or the Maronite Catholic Patriarch. However, Hilu is probably less objectionable to these leaders than some other candidates.

Hilu is 51 years old, and has served in several cabinet posts since an earlier career in journalism. Like many other Lebanese, he appears to be something of a Francophile.

Iran-USSR: Iran and the USSR have initialed a civil air agreement providing for mutual overflight and landing rights. A major stumbling block in the protracted negotiations was resolved when the USSR agreed that third country nationals may serve in the crews of Iranian aircraft as long as such crewmen are from countries which also have civil air agreements with Moscow. According to the Iranians, Aeroflot may start scheduled flights in about a month.]
